lieve that the funding bills will go through Congress, but only after an educational process has been completed.

The U.S. source said that he did not believe Seoul's insistence on prior completion of the compensatory measures was a major problem. However, the South Koreans are well aware of congressional veto rights on funding. A $1.5-billion modernization program undertaken with U.S. help is two years late and still incomplete because Congress limited funds.

A personal letter from President Carter that Mr. Brown presented to President Park today reaffirmed the U.S. commitment under the mutual security treaty and U.S. determination to "provide prompt support to help the Republic of Korea defend against armed attack."

A change in the command structure will place most of the country's air defense and U.S. Air Force units under a joint command with a U.S. commander and a Korean deputy. The joint commander would be the four-star general who commands U.S. and UN forces in South Korea.

The calm of the talks seems to represent a determined effort by both governments to control the rapid decline of bilateral relations. U.S. public opinion has been inflamed by the alleged bribery of U.S. politicians by Tongson Park and human rights violations in South Korea.

In addition to a mutual wish to restore relations there appears to be an understanding that any disagreement may be interpreted by North Korean President Kim Il Sung as a sign of weakness.

Still, the opening statements by Mr. Brown and his Korean counterpart illustrated the different objectives and attitudes of the two governments. According to sources close to the conference, the Seoul official stated that South Korea would prefer that U.S. troops stay, but had no choice but to accept the withdrawal.

Mr. Brown said that a careful reduction over a five-year period was preferable to a sudden mass withdrawal, which could occur if the political pressures against a U.S. presence in South Korea suddenly mounted.

and making malicious statements about the company.

Seymour Topping, managing editor of The Times, said that he had reviewed the investigation and found it proper.

Stock Price Remains Low

The stakes in the current inquiries are high for Gulf and Western. The conglomerate, which was established in the 1950s by Mr. Bluhdorn, has climbed 57th among the 500 largest industrial corporations in the country and it has been seeking more acceptance from Wall Street analysts and investors.

Company officials believe the low price of Gulf and Western stock, which has hovered between $12 and $14 on the New York Stock Exchange—roughly three to four times earnings—is partly due to the widespread knowledge of the SEC investigation.

Late last month, the SEC, in a rare move, delayed an attempt by a subsidiary of the company to raise $75 million through the public sale of securities. The action was linked, the company acknowledged in a public statement, to the commission's investigation.

The size of the huge conglomerate, the nation's 19th largest employer and 44th in assets, is

Begin Opens Attack on Rabin On Return From Trip to U.S.

TEL AVIV, July 25 (AP)—Prime Minister Menachem Begin returned today from a visit to the United States and immediately plunged into a counterattack against his opposition at home.

Repeating to criticism from his predecessor, Yitzhak Rabin, Mr. Begin said his visit reversed the disharmony between Israel and the United States established during Mr. Rabin's visit to Washington four months ago.

In a radio interview Saturday, Mr. Begin attacked Mr. Rabin for failing to thrust out existing problems with Mr. Carter and for not taking Israel's case to the public if necessary.

"It was the previous government that created the confrontation," Mr. Begin said at Ben-Gurion Airport. "The new government of Israel took our country out of the confrontation."

Mr. Begin said he had "adopted a completely different strategy" toward the United States by refusing to negotiate the details of a Middle East settlement, insisting this should be reserved for discussion with the Arabs.

The two countries remain divided over the issues of where Israel's final borders should be and whether a homeland for the Palestinians should be established.

Mr. Begin said Mr. Rabin's mistake had been to try to reach agreement with the United States on a common stand to be taken when Arab-Israeli peace talks resume, probably in October.

He said this position "invites

World's Dependence on Coal Called Dangerous to Climate shift from Iowa to a Canadian region where the soil is far less fertile, Dr. Revelle said.

Particularly vulnerable, he added, would be the fringes of arid regions, where a large part of the world population derives its sustenance, although the effect is difficult to predict. Marine life would suffer from lack of nutrients because a "lid" of warm water would impede circulation that normally brings nutrients to the surface.

On the other hand, plant productivity, Dr. Revelle noted, could rise 50 per cent because plants would be "fertilized" by the higher carbon dioxide content of the air. The warmer climate could melt the floating pack ice of the Arctic Ocean, leading to radical changes in the northern climate.

The report suggests that increased snowfall on Antarctica could overheat the west Antarctic ice sheet, sending large sections of it into the sea. This would raise global sea levels 15 feet. The oceans would swell from being warmed to make the total rise 20 feet.

The study assumed a world population of 10 billion by late in the next century and a fivefold increase over present energy consumption.

One-Man Show Alleged

For many Wall Street brokers and investors, Gulf and Western's success has been intertwined with the personal success of Mr. Bluhdorn, who is 50 years old and who has served as the company's chief operating officer since its founding. Mr. Bluhdorn, who was born in Vienna, emigrated to the United States as a teen-ager during World War II and began working in a cotton brokerage house for $15 a week. He was a commodities expert and a millionaire before he was 30. At times abrasive, at times charming, he is always quick to show anger.

Mr. Bluhdorn took over a small Midwest manufacturing company in the early 1950s and formed Gulf and Western Industries a few years later. His genius in turning Gulf and Western into a major conglomerate within the next dozen years has been widely recognized on Wall Street as an accomplishment based on a solid knowledge of corporate financing and structure.

Some critics of G & W have complained, however, about what they termed the company's lack of in-depth management planning and have accused Mr. Bluhdorn of running a one-man operation with a board of directors that is afraid to raise opposition to any merger proposal.

Eight of the company's 15 directors currently work for Gulf and Western; three others formerly worked for the company; two were either large shareholders or directors in corporations acquired by Gulf and Western, and two other directors are attorneys whose law firms receive high legal fees from the company.

Domination Is Denied

The remaining director, Irwin Schloer of New York, is an investment banker who has been described by one of his former colleagues as a close friend of Mr. Bluhdorn.

Asked to comment, Donald Oresman, a senior partner at Simpson, Thacher and member of Gulf and Western's board of directors, denied that the board was not independent.

"On paper, the board doesn't look like the strongest board in the world," Mr. Oresman said, "but as a matter of fact, it's a very feisty board." Mr. Oresman is one of the attorneys representing Gulf and Western before the SEC.

Outside directors (those board members with no personal, personal or business relationships to the company) traditionally have been expected to act as independent checks on corporate behavior.

Stock Deal Preceded Probe

One of the most serious accusations against Mr. Bluhdorn concerns his alleged failure to tell the truth in connection with a suit brought by the A & P food store chain in 1973 in Federal Court in Manhattan.

It was a characteristic one-man endeavor by Mr. Bluhdorn—involving G & W's large purchases of Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. stock in the early 1970s over the opposition of some of his close advisers—that led to the SEC's investigation of his sworn testimony.

A key element in that inquiry concerns the existence of an in-depth marketing study of A & P, that was prepared by Gulf and Western's research office.

Government officials said that Mr. Bluhdorn had told the SEC in a sworn affidavit that the A & P study was in effect "taken care of" by a key adviser, taken care of after Mr. Bluhdorn denied its existence during a 1973 deposition taken in connection with a successful lawsuit filed by A & P to temporarily block any takeover attempt.

Purpose of Holdings

The litigation revolved around the specific issue of whether Gulf and Western's large A & P stock purchases were for investment purposes only or in anticipation of an eventual take-over. Under securities law, the company was compelled to state its purpose in seeking to buy the additional stock.

Gulf and Western had denied, however, any take-over intent in its initial proposal to buy the stock—a denial that conceivably could have been undermined by the existence of the marketing study. Mr. Dolark is known to have told the SEC that the marketing study contradicted Gulf and Western's denial of take-over intent.

Gulf and Western, after losing the suit, agreed to dispose of its 1 million shares of A & P stock.

Mr. Dolark further told the SEC, in a sworn affidavit, that the government officials said, that Mr. Bluhdorn had told him and other G & W officials during a recess in the hearing that he knew of the lengthy marketing study. In his testimony, however, according to a transcript, Mr. Bluhdorn described A & P as a "pretty well-known company, per se, and there wasn't any detailed analysis, per se, of any kind."

The government officials said that Mr. Dolark had told the SEC that he and others present, including Lawrence Levinson, a company vice-president who formerly served as a deputy special counsel to the late President Lyndon Johnson, also knew that the conglomerate had prepared an in-depth A & P report.

Mr. Levinson left the deposition hearing shortly after Mr. Bluhdorn expressed concern about his own testimony, the SEC was

Final Returns Sought

Spanish Popular Vote Total For June 15 Still Unpublished

By Stanley Meisler

MADRID, July 25—More than a month has passed since Spain held its first openly contested election in four decades. The elected candidates are already at work in the Cortes (parliament). Yet the people still do not know the final returns of the popular vote in that election.

In its first try at democracy, the government of King Juan Carlos and Premier Adolfo Suarez has violated a cardinal rule of democracy—publish the returns of an election quickly and completely. Otherwise, suspicion of fraud is inevitable.

There are suspicions here now, and a good deal of smiling about it. One cartoonist keeps drawing a caricature of Interior Minister Rodolfo Martin Villa with a pot perched on his head. The word for election fraud in Spanish—pucherazo—is similar to and may be derived from the Spanish word for "pot," pot, or puchero. Former Foreign Minister Jose Maria de Arellano has said, "The manipulation of these results by the government's communication media has been truly picturesque and lamentable."

The problem may be caused in part by inexperience. The Spanish government, after almost 40 years of dictatorship, is new at the democratic game. But there is substantial evidence that more than inexperience is at the root of the trouble.

Embarrassed by Vote

The government is obviously embarrassed by the popular vote returns. The Union of the Democratic Center, the party of Premier Suarez, won what seemed like an impressive victory over a majority of 155 of the 350 seats in the Congress of Deputies and a majority of 106 of the 307 elected seats in the Senate. But the victory was fashioned mainly out of an electoral law that favored rural, conservative provinces over industrial, leftist provinces. In the popular vote, the party of Premier Suarez barely defeated the Socialist Workers party.

The government has not really hidden this. But it has dawdled with the returns and displayed them in such a way as to conceal the average Spaniard into believing that the Suarez party's victory was overwhelming.

This becomes clear in a chronological rundown of how the returns were packaged and presented in the voting for the Congress of Deputies, the more important of the two houses.

In the early hours of June 16, the government, in announcing the first returns, issued only percentages of the popular vote. These showed a huge lead for the government-favored party. For example, Mr. Suarez's Union of the Democratic Center had 44 per cent of the popular vote at 5:45 a.m., while the Socialist Workers party, in second place, had 25 per cent.

Official Apologizes

Mr. Martin Villa had promised that the final returns would be announced that morning. But, in a televised news conference, he apologized and reported that the final returns would be delayed because of technical problems, including the slow pace of counting.

During the day, the government kept issuing both the totals of the popular vote and the percentage of the popular vote. But an embarrassing situation was developing: The Socialist Workers party of Felipe Gonzalez was steadily closing the gap with the party of Mr. Suarez. Moreover, if one added the popular vote of a splinter Socialist group, the Popular Socialist party of Enrique Tierno Galvan, the Socialists were getting more votes than the party of Mr. Suarez.

On June 17, the returns issued that day, with 89 per cent of the vote counted, the Union of the Democratic Center had 4,989,102 votes or 31 per cent of the total, while the Socialist Workers party had 4,580,406 votes, or 29 per cent of the total. The combined Socialist vote was almost 190,000 more than the Suarez vote. The Madrid newspaper Diario 16 headlined its story, "Felipe and Tierno more votes than Suarez."

The government then stopped issuing returns for much of the next day. When it finally did issue new returns late that afternoon, the Suarez party had widened its lead over the Socialist Workers party, and the combined Socialist vote no longer was greater than the Suarez vote.

Diario 16 became suspicious of this. In a published analysis, the newspaper said that more votes seemed to have been added to the sum of each party than the total number of new voters counted. The government never defended itself against this accusation.

The Los Angeles Times has asked various agencies of the government for the final returns. A spokesman for the Ministry of Interior said the ministry did not have them. He added that he was surprised the newspaper wanted to know the popular vote, since the candidates already had been proclaimed. A spokesman for the office of Premier Suarez said he had no idea when the popular vote totals would be released. He added that journalists need not worry about them for they would not change the composition of the Cortes in any way. An official of the Cortes said the final returns were somewhere in the building, but that they could not be released yet. The official said it might take several months before they were released. No reason was given for the delay.

Rhodesia Colored Family Caught In Middle of Racial Conflict

SALISBURY, Rhodesia, July 25 (AP)—Florie Adams, sitting in her comfortably furnished lounge in a Salisbury suburb, wondered why her son was serving in the Rhodesian Army. She wondered, too, why her husband was working for a company putting up security fences in areas infiltrated by black nationalist guerrillas.

Florie Adams, one of Rhodesia's 22,000 coloreds, or persons of mixed race, learned last week that she and her family faced eviction from the home they bought two years ago because it is in the "white-reserved" suburb of Prospect.

"When you are suddenly told you must get out of your house like this you start wondering why they are risking their lives," she said, after the Salisbury City Council voted on Thursday to invoke the Urban Councils Act against her family as a test case.

The act requires whites, blacks and coloreds and Asians to live in separate suburbs.

Court Ends U.K.-French Oil-Search Dispute

By James Goldsborough

PARIS, July 25 (UPI)—Following more than two years of deliberations, an international court today divided up a disputed part of the Atlantic Ocean between France and Britain in which both countries believe there may be significant oil reserves.

The court's decision ends a 12-year dispute by dividing the territory in half with a territorial line running about midway between those proposed by the French and British.

Both countries immediately welcomed the Geneva court's decision, though French officials indicated that they thought the court had rejected the principal British claims. The court did not give full weight to the British argument that the demarcation line be measured from the Scilly Islands, off Land's End in Cornwall, and from the Channel Islands off Normandy.

Much at Stake

The French, on the other hand, saw the court award the British a 12-mile exploration zone surrounding the Channel Islands, Jersey, Guernsey and Sark—which the French had wanted held to six miles.

France, in particular, has much at stake in the oil exploration now going on in this area west of Brittany and Cornwall. Unlike Britain, with its substantial North Sea oil reserves, France has no oil, and an oil strike in these Western waters would be hailed in Paris. At present, the French are banking on nuclear energy to solve their long-term needs.

French companies have been drilling for several years in the French waters south of the disputed area, but so far without success. The oil companies have long believed, however, that the most favorable ground was located within the disputed area, which neither country has explored while awaiting the court's decision.

Legal sources believe that today's decision may serve as a precedent for other cases involving similar principles, particularly the territorial dispute between Greece and Turkey in the Aegean Sea.

To avoid a repetition of the Greek-Turkish dispute, President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing and former Prime Minister Harold Wilson agreed here three years ago to set up an impartial court to rule.

The main dispute in the Atlantic, as in the Aegean, was whether to measure from the islands, Scilly in the west and the Channel Islands in the south, or

Owen Doubts Smith's Support Of Majority Rule in Rhodesia

LONDON, July 25 (AP)—British Foreign Secretary David Owen said today that he does not believe Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith can contribute to black majority rule and peace in that African country.

"If it was in my power I would have removed Mr. Smith the day I took office," Mr. Owen told the House of Commons, where he was questioned on the progress of a British-U.S. peace initiative in Rhodesia.

Mr. Owen returned last yesterday from a two-day meeting in Washington with President Carter and U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance. Mr. Owen announced that his talks on achieving a negotiated settlement in Rhodesia will resume with Vance in London Aug. 11-12.

"We are all agreed that situation in Rhodesia is politically so serious that the British initiative, despite all difficulties, should continue that we should do all the can to bring about an independent nonracial Zimbabwe, a fair election and on the of universal suffrage," Mr. said.

Mr. Owen said that April Mr. Smith's actions given him "some ground pessimism" about the progress of the Rhodesian commitment to black-majority rule. He cited Rhodesian against black nationalist guerrillas in Mozambique, detention of Mr. Smith's possible protection of one-man, or elections as reasons.

"I don't believe Mr. Smith a contribution to make to majority rule and peace in Rhodesia," he said.

Asked about the use of troops to achieve a settlement in Rhodesia, Mr. Owen said that is a "threshold" which every successive government since 1965 has been prepared to go. He added the Carter administration made it clear it has no intention of putting ground troops in Rhodesia.

shares in the Atlanta bank he once headed was businesslike, proper and legitimate, the Associated Press reported.

Mr. Lance also responded to several other allegations about his business conduct before he joined the government. He said that because they all were raised at one time, they have "certainly created a haze of unwarranted uncertainty around me."

He denied that there was any relation between the loan he received from the Chicago bank and the establishment there by the National Bank of Georgia of a noninterest-bearing correspondent account.

The senators were unanimous in telling Mr. Lance that they believe his explanations under oath have "cleared the air" and restored his "presumption of innocence."

Mr. Mitchell also said that Mr. Lance's former partners, John Stembler and Daniel Padillo, were amenable to the new buyers having a major voice in the management and direction of the bank. Neither Mr. Stembler nor Mr. Padillo could be reached for comment last night.

Robert Dietrich, a spokesman for Mr. Lance, said that Mr. Lance had not been consulted about the purchaser's tentative agreement. "I understand a telegram about this is on its way to Mr. Lance."

Mr. Mitchell insisted buyer did not know Mr. Lance personally and that the "is a legitimate business with an arm's-length relationship" between the bank and Mr. Lance.

There is absolutely no political in this transaction, said, although Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., chairman of Governmental Affairs Committee, said in a statement that "it is in no way meant to be a criticism of the tomorrow."

He also acknowledged that Mr. Lance's relationship with the bank was approved of by his bank's board, he had told about the prospect "I don't think he's particularly interested in the detail Mr. Mitchell said. "He's done."

Sources close to the bank said that it was Mr. Lance's close friend, President Carter's poll Jackson Stephens, a 19 Ark. financier and stockholder in the transaction, that he was approach financial adviser to the bank.

Mr. Stephens acknowledged that he was approach financial adviser to the bank.

"I do not want to give my name because he has informed some other in his company about the Stephens said. "But he be involved with a bank company and this is the he can do it in Georgia."

Mr. Stephens described arrangement as "a good" though the buyer will be more than the approximate share for which the bank is selling on the over-the-market last week.

Mr. Mitchell said that was probably the only Georgia bank that could be to with the idea of a bank holding company, you need a bank that is based and one that has large block of stock and

He added that there is an unusual about the bank's substantially increasing trading price of $10 a share. Mr. Mitchell noted that Mr. Lance had bought 61 per cent of the bank's stock in 1975 at $17.73 a share in the bank's open market that day. The price of $7 and an 80 per cent of $9.

Mr. Mitchell said that the bank's ability would use the money to buy back stock from the sale of NBC stock to all the loan from First Bank of Chicago. He said that the bank had other personal loans to which involved NBC stock which would be substituted as collateral for the bank's stock holdings as collateral.

Unfulfilled Promises' Claimed

ter Defends Job Program
er Attack by Black Leader

By Warren Brown

WASHINGTON, July 25 (UPI).—President Carter, answering a question from a black leader, defended his welfare proposals today, saying they will create 1 million jobs.

Seen in office now for six months, the President told the Urban League, a black organization, "I have no apologetics." Mr. Carter promised that his administration would provide "real money, real help" to help real people in real need.

President's speech to the annual conference of the Urban League, a black organization, was followed by a sharp criticism of the administration's welfare proposals by a black leader, Vernon Jordan, who charged Mr. Carter with unfulfilled promises.

Mr. Carter said his administration has launched a major effort to help the poor, including a requirement that 10 per cent of all subcontracts in the public works bill must go to minority groups.

Unemployment, he said, could be "perhaps as low as 6.5 per cent by the end of the year, with a trend downward." The U.S. jobless rate in June was 7.1 per cent.

The President said his major goal was to ensure that "all those who are able to work should be able to find work."

The President also cited his program to provide $1.5 billion for jobs for unemployed youth, the doubling of the Job Corps, and doubling of public service jobs for the unemployed, to $250,000.

"Guaranteed Job" Of his welfare proposals, he said, "There will be an additional 1 million job opportunities. Our goal is for every single family to have . . . a guaranteed job by the government."

He was applauded when he said, "I hope in the months ahead I'll be able to work closely with Vernon Jordan—at the White House."

After Mr. Carter's speech, Mr. Jordan shook the President's hand warmly and the two talked for 15 minutes, before Mr. Carter returned to the White House.

In his keynote speech yesterday to the convention, Mr. Jordan said:

"The sad fact is that the list of what the administration has not done for blacks and the cities far exceeds its list of accomplishments. The sad fact is that the administration is not living up to the first commandment of politics—help those who help you."

His criticism of President Carter was the sharpest so far by a national black leader, although it has been clear for some time that dissatisfaction has been growing among blacks.

Not a Break Mr. Jordan said at a news conference that his criticisms should not be viewed as a break between the nation's black leadership and the Carter administration. Blacks in general and the Urban League in particular "are no different from any other group"—including labor and women—who are dissatisfied with the President's efforts in protecting or advancing the group's interests, he said.

"My belief is that the President might appreciate this assessment, though he might not like it," Mr. Jordan said.

He attacked Mr. Carter's welfare-revision proposals and questioned the administration's commitment to helping the urban poor.

Mr. Jordan urged the President to "symbolize his concern with the urban poor" by visiting the sections of New York City that were ravaged by looting and arson during the city's recent blackout.

WASHINGTON, July 25 (UPI).—The Nuclear Regulatory Commission has adopted many of the suggestions made by a critical staff official who charged that the commission's allegedly casual approach to preventing the theft of plutonium and highly enriched uranium posed a potential threat to national security, it has been learned.

The commission's decision to accept several of the key recommendations, made by unanimous vote June 30, was not announced.

The allegations, by James Conran, are under investigation by four congressional committees, and Mr. Conran is scheduled to testify before two of the committees this week.

Mr. Conran, an analyst with the commission's Division of Safeguards, first stated in April of last year his reservations about the commission's effort to control nuclear material that could be made into atomic bombs. A year later, disappointed by the agency's response, he restated his objections in public letters to President Carter, Rep. Morris Udall, D-Ariz., and the commission itself.

His central allegation was that the federal government had suppressed information that the commission's staff needed to devise effective regulations to prevent the theft of plutonium and highly enriched uranium.

Mr. Conran said, for example, that information about the relative ease of making homemade atomic bombs had been withheld, as were "serious indications" that a large amount of special nuclear material might have been stolen from a fuel-processing plant "at some time in the past."

Although Mr. Conran has not disclosed the location of the possible theft, a recently obtained commission document reports that in 1965 a nuclear facility in Apollo, Pa., was unable to account for 381.6 pounds of highly enriched uranium.

Nuclear energy officials have insisted that there is no evidence that the special nuclear material

Ute and Comanche Leaders Smoke the Peace Pipe
At a Ceremony Ending Two Centuries of Hostility

(AP).—The drums are silent, the dancers gone. The peace pipe has been smoked and the sacred cedar fire extinguished. After two centuries of strife, the Ute and Comanche are brothers, united by their vow that the fighting has ended.

warriors clashing repeatedly over hunting rights on the southern plains.

As the buffalo were wiped out and the white man advanced, the tribes met in 1870 to talk peace, only to be thwarted when someone fired a shot that sent them back into battle. More than 100 years later, their lands reduced to reservations and with tribal chairmen instead of chiefs, they met again. Two years of planning attracted nearly 4,000 spectators to yesterday's ceremony.

The 40 Ute and Comanche leaders and elders signed their names on the scrolls yesterday, attesting that they took part in the sacred peace ceremony inside a teepee.

In the weeks before the two nations signed the treaty, leaders from both tribes said they believed the document would mean "a new era for all American Indians." The two tribes once were bitter enemies, their managed to preserve much of the enthusiasm, optimism and determination he brought to it last January.

But the lethargic movement of the drought-relief money through the federal pipeline underscores what several of his aides have said may be the most important lesson of his White House experience: his discovery that there are limits to his power.

He had taken a keen interest and invested considerable time and energy in the problem, tramping through California's parched San Joaquin Valley to dramatize his concern, proposing and then actively promoting the legislation he had signed with such confidence that morning in the Rose Garden—and still, nothing has happened.

"That sort of thing is frustrating and disappointing, but I think he's beginning to see himself as part of a process," his press secretary, Jody Powell, said on the eve of the President's six-month anniversary.

"That process," Mr. Powell said, "sometimes works well and sometimes works poorly—but it is a process and he's come to accept the fact that, even while he tries to improve it, he remains a part of it."

If that suggests that the President has come to grips with certain realities of the bureaucratic structure in Washington, it does not reflect the extent to which he has maintained an avid, managerial interest in his operations. "Nothing that he gets his hands on is too inconsequential for him to try to deal with," an aide said.

Consequently, some of his aides find his attention to details an impediment to good management. Subtle hints have been dropped at the White House in that direction. "Nothing changes," an aide said. "He has his eye on anything that moves."

Another said that he believes "it is constitutionally impossible for Mr. Carter to operate differently."

As a result, some of his aides suggested, the President and his staff members are particularly susceptible to the frustrations of the bureaucracy's limitations and lethargy.

"It's like sleeping in a bed with nine other people," a senior assistant said. "You can't scratch your nose unless the other nine turn over—and if they won't."

As a result, some of his aides suggested, the President and his staff members are particularly susceptible to the frustrations of the bureaucracy's limitations and lethargy.

Captured by North Korea in '68

Bucher Says U.S. Ignores Lesson of Pueblo

By Bernard Weinraub

POWAY, Calif. (UPI).—Nine years after North Korean gunboats seized the USS Pueblo, its retired commander, Lloyd Bucher, lives quietly in a secluded ranch house, growing avocados, painting and studying art.

He said recently that the Navy and the government have learned little from the Pueblo experience, that the proposed withdrawal of U.S. ground troops from South Korea is a mistake, that the 11 months he spent in a North Korean prison remain a burning memory.

"It will be with me for the rest of my days," said Mr. Bucher, who was tortured by his North Korean captors before finally signing a false confession to spying inside Korean waters.

A hefty figure now, Mr. Bucher, 50, said that the dark experience of the Pueblo was virtually meaningless for the Navy. "What has the Navy learned," he asked, "very little."

Mr. Bucher speaks at times bitterly, at times wistfully, about his 27 years in the Navy and the incident that ended his career.

Career Collapsed His career, he said, collapsed on Jan. 23, 1968, when North Korean gunboats and planes captured the converted cargo ship that had been sent on a secret intelligence mission with poor equipment, old steering gear and a pair of machine guns as its only weapons.

Mr. Bucher, one of 22 surviving crew members, was held 11 months in North Korea and faced an eight-week naval court of inquiry after his release. The five admirals on the court recommended court-martial for Mr. Bucher for surrendering his ship without a fight—he testified that he lacked the power to resist and that it would have meant a "slaughter"—and for the ship's intelligence officer, Lt. Comdr. Stephen Harris.

But the recommendations were canceled by Navy Secretary John Chafee who said that the Pueblo's officers and men had "suffered enough." But Mr. Bucher's career in the Navy was over.

He was temporarily assigned to a desk job, and before retiring on May 31, 1973, served as chief staff officer for Minesweeper Flotilla 1, helping to organize the mining of North Vietnamese waters and later the removal of mines laid in the U.S. blockade of the North Vietnamese port of Haiphong.

Disagrees With Carter With the Koreans abruptly in the news—the administration's decision to withdraw ground troops, the attack on a U.S. helicopter that left three crewmen dead—Mr. Bucher voiced his views firmly.

The withdrawal, he said, is a profound error. "The presence of American troops, perhaps more than any other factor, keeps the North Koreans from pushing to the brink of war," he said. "At some point in time, the North Koreans can mount a really vicious campaign, a guerrilla campaign, politically undermining the government, raising discontent among students, bringing tremendous pressures down on the government and finally destroying its credibility. And American troops help prevent this."

He is bitter when discussing officials in the Navy, the State Department and other government agencies who, he said, promised help if the Pueblo ran into trouble but ignored his pleas. "Nobody past the level of COLOMBO, July 25 (Reuters).—A curfew imposed in eight Sri Lanka districts after post-election violence in which 34 persons died was relaxed today. Senior officials here said two more deaths were reported today, but the situation was under control.

Strong police patrols were being maintained in all the troubled areas, around Colombo and the central hills capital of Kandy. The violence was pushed into the background as offices and stores resumed normal activity after a four-day public holiday that followed Thursday's election.

Sri Lanka's new 168-member assembly is expected to meet for the first time Aug. 4. Government sources said that it would give priority to drafting a new constitution, which could be ready in weeks.

Prime Minister Jayewardene has announced his intention of becoming president under a new system of government in which the president would be the chief executive as well as head of state.

commander of the U.S. Pueblo was called in to account for those decisions that had been so poorly and tragically rendered," he said.

He said that the concept of the code of conduct for U.S. prisoners remains confusing and virtually meaningless and that the Pentagon has failed to deal with the problem. "What good is the code of conduct to anyone captured in a situation such as we were in a narrow situation?" he asked. "What does it mean? What does the Geneva Convention mean—it means nothing if the people on the other side don't recognize it."

Mr. Bucher said that the "guidelines are not any clearer today" about the use of armed defense in a situation such as the Pueblo's. "If I had armed people with a few 45s and M-1s—and some of us had survived—I would have been accused of having overreacted."

Although angry, even bitter, Mr. Bucher said that he hoped one day that his memories of the Pueblo would disappear. "There are guys in art school who never heard of the Pueblo," he said. "Young people. It's a great feeling. It helps you put the whole thing behind. The Pueblo, after all, was a very minor footnote to history. It happened to be part of it. It concerned me night and day for a while. It obsessed me. I don't think it obsesses me now anymore."

Show of Support Predicted As Andreotti Meets Carter

By Graham Hovey

WASHINGTON, July 25 (NYT).—The Carter administration will make every effort to demonstrate its support for Italian Premier Giulio Andreotti and his minority Christian Democratic government, which depends on Communist support in Parliament for survival.

Mr. Andreotti arrived today for a three-day official visit that is to include two meetings with President Carter and individual sessions with four Cabinet members.

His arrival in Washington comes only 10 days after his so-called "programmatic accord," a seven-point platform of reforms, won its first crucial tests in the Chamber of Deputies with the aid of Italy's powerful Communist party. It was the first time that the Communists had voted with the government in three decades.

Mr. Carter and Secretary of State Cyrus Vance are expected to indicate their hope that Mr. Andreotti can continue to exclude the Communists from his Cabinet, but they will make it clear that they understand why he had to seek Communist support, administration officials said yesterday.

Officials emphasized the administration's conviction that the Premier had maneuvered with great skill to get support both from his own divided Christian Democrats and from other parties, including the Communists, since he formed his minority administration a year ago.

"Everyone is surprised that he has lasted as long as he has and accomplished as much as he has," said one official. He said that Washington was now confident that the "programmatic accord," emphasizing law and order, inflation control, an attack on unemployment, tax and educational reforms, had bought Mr. Andreotti valuable time, and that his government was not in danger.

Although Italy still is afflicted by violence, terrorism and per-

Venice Taxis Make Waves Against Rule

VENICE, July 25 (AP).—

Venetian taxi drivers, who operate in motorboats, kept their vehicles moored today in a strike called by their union. They were protesting a city ordinance that makes the Grand Canal and most of the city's other canals open only to one-way traffic.

Venetian authorities enacted the ordinance to reduce waves, created by motorboats in two-way traffic, that damage buildings along the canals. The taxi drivers claim that the new ordinance is unnecessary and will force them to charge more, because the one-way traffic pattern will result in longer routes.

sistently high unemployment, officials cited a considerable improvement in the economy during Mr. Andreotti's year in office. Inflation has been cut from 23 to 13 per cent, the annual growth rate has remained steady at about 2.5 per cent, a balance-of-payments surplus of $400 million was recorded last month and the Bank of Italy's hard-currency reserve stands at about $7 billion. These indications of limited progress have helped create a good atmosphere for Mr. Andreotti's talks with Mr. Carter and other administration leaders.

Carrillo Book Fast Becoming Secret Best Seller in Prague

By Paul Hofmann

VIENNA, July 25 (NYT).—An intellectual in Prague, asked in a telephone conversation about literary news in his city, chuckled and reported: "It seems the 'padlocked editions' have a new best-selling author—Santiago Carrillo."

Mr. Carrillo, secretary-general of the Spanish Communist party, has written a controversial book, "Eurocommunism and the State," that is being read, translated, excerpted and discussed throughout Eastern Europe. In Prague, it is being clandestinely distributed in what are called padlocked, or unauthorized, editions.

The padlocked editions are published by a group of dissident writers and editors, which is turning out typewritten copies of texts banned by the rigorous pro-Moscow Czechoslovak Communists.

In "Eurocommunism and the State," which appeared in Spain earlier this year, Mr. Carrillo criticized the Soviet system, declaring that it was not "a genuine workers' democracy" and had produced "deformations and degenerations." He also deplored the Soviet military intervention in 1968 that ended Alexander Dubcek's experiment in liberalizing Communism in Czechoslovakia.

Moscow reacted harshly. In a review of the book, the political weekly Novoye Vremya (New Times) accused Mr. Carrillo of anti-Sovietism and warned that his ideas, if practiced, would split the international Communist movement.

The denunciation drew protests from the Spanish, French, Italian and Yugoslav Communist parties. New Times later explained that it had not meant to call for excommunication of the Spanish party or any other "fraternal party."

Analysts of Communist affairs noted that Moscow's criticisms were wholeheartedly endorsed only in Czechoslovakia and East Germany. The response to Mr. Carrillo's interpretation seemed ambiguous in Poland and surprisingly bland in Bulgaria, where the Moscow line is normally followed without question. Appraisals in Hungary and Romania betrayed degrees of sympathy for Mr. Carrillo's views.

The official attacks have created enormous interest in the book, and the producers of the padlocked editions apparently are having trouble getting out enough. While it would be hard to find a copy in the Spanish original or in translation in any bookstore in Eastern Europe, except Yugoslavia, there are signs that many versions other than the Czechoslovak one are circulating in the countries under Soviet influence.

Anti-Invasion Forces

Yugoslavs Said to Strengthen Army for Post-Tito Pressure

By Drew Middleton

NEW YORK, July 25 (NYT).—The Yugoslav Army, bracing itself for any foreign pressures that may arise after the death of President Tito, now in his 85th year, has been strengthened militarily and politically, according to U.S. and British defense analysts.

In the view of analyst Stephen Larrabee, Yugoslavia "is rapidly approaching a crucial turning point," with internal and external pressures certain to increase after the death of Marshal Tito, who has dominated Yugoslav political life since World War II.

Mr. Larrabee is the author of a paper, "Balkan Security," published by the International Institute for Strategic Studies in London; the contents of which correspond closely with material gathered by U.S. and British intelligence sources of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Yugoslavia has organized a territorial defense force of approximately 600,000 men. Although its mission has not been stated publicly, Western analysts believe its task would be to supplement the efforts of the regular army to resist occupation by a foreign power and to insure that any attempt to invade would be a long and costly operation.

The force has been organized in each of Yugoslavia's six republics. The emphasis in ing has been on guerrilla tactics. Mr. Larrabee reports that these units also have been trained in approximately 2,000 factories and other enterprises. Some republic maintain battalion-size units of 850 men.

Law Forbids Capitalism. The national defense law bids anyone in Yugoslavia acknowledge or sign a capitulation or accept or seize the occupation of the territory or any republic.

Although Yugoslavia has denied that the strengthening of national defense is aimed at the Soviet Union, U.S. and British analysts point out that, of all the neighbors, only the Union possesses the strength to carry out an invasion.

The reorganization of the defense establishment has been accompanied by attempts to modernize and diversify the Yugoslav army. It produces 70 per cent of the arms it needs, much of this is small and light artillery. For scaled weapons, the Yu have had to turn to the Union, and the military evidently find this an awkward position, which makes the key vulnerable to Soviet pressure.

To end or at least reduce dependence on the Russia, Yugoslavs have shown an interest recently in advanced weapons, such as anti-air missiles.

Laetrile Caused Adverse Reaction In 2 U.S. Patients

WASHINGTON, July 25 (WP).—Two cancer patients who had taken the highly controversial drug Laetrile were treated at Georgetown University Medical Center for serious adverse reactions to the substance, which promoters have proclaimed to be harmless.

Four Georgetown cancer specialists reported the cases in a paper to the Journal of the American Medical Association. They warned that "it cannot be assumed that Laetrile is non-toxic or that this compound has not already contributed to the deaths of patients with malignant diseases." The two patients were not taking Laetrile under Georgetown's auspices.

"We feel that these cases represent definite toxicities resulting from the administration of Laetrile," the doctors wrote. The doctors reported that the reactions were such that they might have been missed by a doctor prescribing and believing in Laetrile. Such a physician, or patient, might have instead believed the reaction to be caused by the patient's cancer rather than by the "cure."

The physicians, however, believe that their evidence is clear. When the patients used the drug they experienced the reactions, when they stopped using it the reactions stopped. The reactions included fever, rash and gastrointestinal disorders.

the same mood are the big black and white polka dots over plain black.

Though Boban's chiffons and especially the gold-embroidered, three-quarter-length, white crepe de chine are beautiful, the newest-looking are the satins and the velvets. There are short, simple, black-and-ivory satin cocktail dresses that stop just below knee-length.

Little Waists

Many of the evening dresses, both short and long, are held up by show-stopping shoulder straps. The straight line of the top is softened by a deep ruffle that almost reaches the waistline. One of the most dramatic is the floor-length black satin that has its own long coat. Another knockout gown, black again, is totally strapless with a wide, black Victorian skirt billowing from the waist. That little waist is the most significant part of the collection. It is boned, just as it is in another of the little black dresses, and it spells out the return to shape that is certainly the big Paris story.

 If Dior was inspired by Gigi, Jean-Louis Scherrer was inspired by Raquel Welch whom he is now dressing. Though two heroines couldn't be more different, the mood is the same in the end—back to shape.

It's by far the most spectacular and luxurious collection Scherrer has ever made. He goes all out for the satins and the velvets, many of them embroidered in gold, hand-beaded and outlined in fur. All of his waistlines are cinched in with separate belts, also jeweled or made of fur.

Scherrer's black velvet evening suit has a jacket outlined in black fox and hand-embroidered in gold that will sell for $14,000 without the big, bouffant velvet skirt that just grazes the ankles. "There are plenty of women who are willing and able to pay that much," he says.

Another stunning group in his collection is made of a panther print on chiffon. The dresses are cut with uneven hemlines and have matching scarfs or stoles. All of them are belted with tawny animal skins, some of them with heads and tails left on.

Scherrer shows many black satins, lightweight and slinky and usually with their own coats and capes or mysterious-looking hooded capes. Most of the collection is black, but the change in textures from satin to velvet makes it both elegant and interesting.

Pierre Cardin, the great individualist in French fashion, has launched a new kind of couture in a new salon this season. His couture is not as pure and elegant as the others. Diluted with more than a strain of ready-to-wear, he calls it prêt-à-couture, and this is the way it goes. The clothes are no longer made to order with the usual numbers but are for sale in regular sizes. What keeps it in the couture category is that everything is made, not in a factory, but in Cardin's own workrooms with all the couture details, like hand-rolled hems, and the alterations are on the house.

Besides what he has named his prêt-à-couture, Cardin has instigated another sensational development. He is charging 50 francs for a customer to look at his collection. This would certainly bring ruin to the house, it was generally predicted. On the contrary, customers have been standing in line. It's the old story about anything that's free.

Cardin and his partner, André Olivier, showed their new fall collection for the first time at the textile museum, in Lyons, to which they flew a group of press and friends.

The following morning it was repeated to a larger crowd in the big new Cardin salon on the second floor of the building that also houses his boutique.

Decorated with shiny white walls and modular chairs that are almost like sitting on the floor, the new salon is just right for showing the new Cardin clothes. For daytime most of them begin with a ribbed wool body suit that covers both arms and legs. Skirts wrap around it and deep dolman sleeves, attached to each other make the tops.

Cardin puts a pleated double ruffle at the neckline of many of his coats, capes and jackets. He likes red, and he likes plaid and other patterns. There is very little black in the collection.

All of Cardin's daytime clothes are short, just grazing the tops of the knees. His dresses are little-girl shifts of plaid and check wool, unbelted and slit a little at the sides. They don't look as short as they are because they are color matched to the knit body suits underneath. There are any number of pants, tailored and harem types of all lengths, but the body suit is all important. Cardin makes it obvious by showing a group of them alone, and with nothing but fancy hats on the models' heads.

Party dresses, still above the knees, are made of brown and putty stripes.

Evening dress include both soft chiffons and big taffetas, very Victorian with small waists and enormous skirts, evening pajamas of satin black crepe, a stunning white crepe with an Empire waist and long stole and pastel organdies with tiny flowers in each tier.

At the end of the first day of Paris shows, the message is: Back to shape, and the Russian peasant is last year's look.

THEATER IN LONDON

Class in the Suburban Wasteland

By John Walker

LONDON, July 25 (IHT)—Mike Leigh's "Abigail's Party" as the Hampstead Theatre Club is a play of many merits and one glaring defect, a lack of compassion. It is excellently acted and directed; in many ways it shows a remarkable special perception. Yet, for all that, it is thoroughly distasteful.

Abigail's party is happening down the street from the sadder gathering that occupies the stage, where Abigail's mother, banished from home on the insistence of her teen-age daughter, spends the evening with her nouveau riche neighbors and a young couple who have just moved into the area.

The play occupies that uneasy territory where the middle classes on the decline meet the lower middle classes on the make. Susan, Abigail's mother, is impeccably genteel, too polite to correct the social gaffes of her hostess. Beverly's grasp of gracious behavior is uncertain and amounts to compulsively topping up her guests' drinks while complaining about the inadequacies of her husband, Laurence. He has hustled his way into a financially richer life-style, naively trying to acquire culture by filling his bookshelf with a set of mail-order Dickens. The younger couple, Angie, a brutally insensitive nurse, and Tony, a failed professional footballer, full of barely suppressed violence, who have moved into one of the neighborhood's cheaper houses, are also unhappy with each other and as socially inept.

Small Talk

The play's purpose is simply to delineate this suburban wasteland. It offers merely a definition of the people who inhabit it, content to exhibit them at their most trivial, engaged in the small talk that is presented as the sum of their lives. But they are shown not merely with a coldness but with a withering contempt that I found disturbing.

The tone comes through in the dialogue. When Susan, doing the correct thing, brings a bottle of wine to the gathering, her hostess brightly remarks, "Beautiful. Fantastic! I'll just pop it into the fridge." Laurence, angered by his wife's philistinism, shows off his volumes of Shakespeare. In their fake leather bindings, adding, "It's part of our heritage. Of course, it's not something you can actually read." And Angie tells the others, "I like making curry. Have you ever tried pulchard curry, made with one of those tin of pilchards in tomato sauce?"

In every case, such lines invite, and receive from their Hampstead audience, condescending laughter. It is an attitude that seems built into Leigh's way of working, which has resulted in many admired television plays and such feature films as "Blast Moments," which was a prizewinner at the Chicago and the Locarno film festivals in 1972.

Leigh goes through a long process of improvisation with his actors, getting them to portray characters and then working on their reactions to a particular situation. Given that they are English actors, it is not surprising that they should be obsessed by class. It is a method, too, in which the dramatic structure is anecdotal, merely an excuse on which to hang an exhibition, and rarely a development of character.

Surface Texture

It is done with considerable brilliance. The surface texture of the play is exactly right, in Tony MacCallin's room setting that perfectly conveys lives given over to conspicuous vulgar consumption. The acting, too, has a remarkable precision. Harriet Reynolds's tight-lipped Susan, sitting bolt upright on a ghisly sofa, is a marvelously understated performance that places perfectly the social nuances of middle-class mother whose life is falling apart, whose husband has left her and whose daughter is turning into a rebellious punk rocker.

No less accurate are the performances of Janine Duvitski, as the crass Angie. John Salthouse as her surly husband and Tim Stern as the work-obsessed Laurence. I was less happy with the acting, expert though it was, of Alison Steadman as Beverly, the silly hostess who dominates the play and is its chief comic butt. Her stiff-shouldered, swaggering walk seemed to derive from Mae West and also owed something to Barry Humphries's Dame Edna Everage, that travesty of misplaced gentility.

But her acting merely emphasized that the play, for all its documentary appearance, actually deals in sour and savage caricature. It is no wonder that "Abigail's Party" should be a great success at the Hampstead Theatre, which has the most bourgeois audience of any theater in London, because it gives players the ideal chance to laugh and sneer at people less socially accomplished than themselves. It presents a half truth as if it were a blinding revelation.

White Woman Wins

Bias Suit in Detroit

DETROIT, July 25 (AP)—A racially mixed jury has awarded $300,000 to a 38-year-old woman who claimed she was fired from her city job because she was white.

Janice Gillispie, a former secretary-bookkeeper with the Detroit Board of Tenants Affairs, said she was hired for the job in 1970 by the board, which then had 14 black and 2 white members. Her lawyer said testimony showed the board held a secret meeting during which some members said Mrs. Gillispie should be fired because she is white.

When a Bank presents its balance sheet, don't just look at the figures.

Look also at the people behind them.

The fact that our balance sheet for 1976 looks encouraging doesn't tell you everything. What a bank is really worth is shown by what it does for its customers.

That's why you should get to know our people. See what they can do for you. Find out how they tackle your problems.

Our teams of specialists have proved themselves. We've become even more efficient, and we've grown as planned.

This progress has made Landesbank Rheinland-Pfalz what it is today: an all-purpose bank of national and international standing.

Results for 1976

The balance sheet total rose by 10.2% (=DM 1.6 bn) to DM 17.4 bn. Total business increased to DM 18.1 bn.

The surplus for the year amounted to DM 28m., DM 14.7m. being distributed to the guarantors as interest on shareholders' equity, and DM 13.3m. being allocated to the published reserves.

Total lending increased by 9.3% (=DM 1.1 bn) to DM 12.9 bn., mainly long-term (+14.5%). The share of such business in the balance sheet total accordingly rose to 45.4%.

The Bank's main source of funds was provided by the issue of its own bonds, a total of DM 2 bn being placed during the year. The total of such paper outstanding reached DM 7.3 bn during the year (+10.5%).

Turnover in the field of services (payments, securities and foreign trade) rose considerably. The syndicate business in securities showed an appreciable expansion, and the Bank participated in the issue of a large number of German and foreign loans.

Landes-Bausparkasse Rheinland-Pfalz expanded its business considerably during the year. Savings agreements concluded by this building society numbered 51,580 (+26.4%) and totalled DM 1.4 bn (+25.8%).

Tourists by the tens of thousands with "confirmed bookings" are daily flocking to the 100 miles of beaches. Some of them are not getting the reception they anticipated.

Extra Bookings

The hotelkeepers, made overly cautious by two years of empty beds, accepted extra bookings as a safety net. Unfortunately, this time the cancellations did not materialize and some hotels have three to five times more guests booked than they can accommo-

"Overbooking"—a new word in Portuguese—has reached the crisis level, and is expected to get worse next month.

The government has called for an official inquiry with fines for offenders and urged the Portuguese to avoid their beaches so more rooms will be available for foreigners.

The National Association of Travel Agents has warned the hotels could be courting disaster with their overbookings—for the contracts they signed with charter groups carry penalty clauses if agreements are not met.

Biggest Culprit

A spokesman for the group said the biggest culprit was the state-run Turismo do Algarve, which recently told 24 foreign agencies that their groups would have to be given alternative accommodation. A German company countered with the threat of a law suit for 500,000 deutsche marks (about $200,000) while a Swedish company diverted charter flights to neighboring Spain.

Tourists' troubles were multiplied by militant workers sporadically cutting off lights and water to the high-rise buildings. They were demanding immediate payment of back wages Torreixa had been unable to meet due to the lack of tourists.

Many of the unwashed guests who had to climb 10 floors to reach their rooms did not appear to support the workers' cause. One frustrated German demonstrated his displeasure by punching a hotel receptionist in the nose. Others simply checked out and went home.

As the problems mounted, the National Hotel Association worried that the penalty clause could be the last straw for the financially strapped tourist industry.

"If things go on this way, by October the hotel industry will be bankrupt," association president Oliveira Santos said.

For the government, a setback in the tourism revival would be a blow. It is depending heavily on the estimated $500 million plus to be spent by tourists to keep the shattered economy in business.

The government announced that in the first five months foreign tourism jumped 51 per cent to 400,000 visitors.

Ancient Human Brain Found at Fla. Dig

WASHINGTON, July 25 (AP)—Archaeologists have found a 5,000-year-old human brain near Sarasota, Fla., that may contain the oldest preserved brain matter yet discovered, the National Geographic Society said over the weekend.

The society, which is co-sponsoring the Florida project, announced here that a Sarasota pathologist has confirmed the findings.

The dig also has produced an extinct tortoise skinned by a stake, and a 10,000-year-old boomerang, possibly the oldest ever found. These and hundreds of other objects have been discovered in a 250-foot-deep, spring-fed sink-hole.

Current-Account Gain Equals '76

Trade Surplus in June in West Germany

West Germany, however, showed a surplus in June, as May's 3.62 billion DM.

Falls New Lows

July 25 (AP-DJ)—Continued to move low territory against the mark and Swiss as European central banks abstained from U.S. currency support.

The June surplus brings the surplus on current account (merchandise trade plus "invisibles" such as freight costs, tourist spending and the like) for the first half of this year up to 5.5 billion DM, the same as in the first half of 1976.

Although the rising value of the mark is making West Germany's goods more expensive abroad, exports increased in the first six months to 134.56 billion DM, compared with 133.51 billion DM a year ago. Imports also rose, to 116.20 billion DM from 107.28 billion DM.

This takes the first-half trade surplus to 18.36 billion DM, up from 16.23 billion DM in the 1976 period.

Exports in June were 23.32 billion DM, up from 22.74 billion DM in May and 30.63 billion DM in June, 1976.

Imports were 20.43 billion DM in June, up from 19.13 billion DM in May and 18.62 billion DM in June last year.

The merchandise trade surplus is largely offset by "invisibles" such as remittances home by the 1.5 million migrant workers in this country, tourism and payments for industrial licenses and patents.

The provisional current-account surplus for June was 800 million DM, compared with a revised 1.7 billion DM in May. The previous provisional figure for May was 1.45 billion DM.

The 1976 current-account surplus has been revised upwards to 8.45 billion DM from the previous figure of 7.51 billion DM, latest Bundesbank statistics show.

Bundesbank economists in Frankfurt say today's report of an unchanged current-account surplus in the first half means the government has effectively given up its official projection that the surplus will be halved this year.

The economists declined to give an estimate for the total 1977 surplus, which the Bundesbank had previously forecast would be around half the then accepted 1976 figure of 7.5 billion DM.

In other economic news, the statistics office reported that the wholesale price index, base 1962, rose 0.2 per cent in June to 182.7 after a gain of 0.4 per cent in May. June's year-on-year rise was 0.8 per cent compared with 0.6 per cent in May.

Economic Revival Seen
BONN, July 25 (AP-DJ)—West Germany's economy continues in the doldrums, but recent measures promise to rekindle the recovery, the Economics Ministry said today.

"The slowdown in the economic recovery process which has been detectable since the beginning of the year appears to be continuing at mid-year," the ministry said in its July report.

Production in the manufacturing sector was on the average higher from January through May than in the last five months of 1976, according to initial figures, the ministry said. However, there has been a weakening since May, it added.

The ministry said prospects were brightened by a number of recent measures, including housing construction and employment, a new tax law and a drop in the prime lending rate. The Lombard rate of the federal bank was lowered earlier this month a half point to 4 per cent.

Twins' Power

Overwhelms A's

BLOOMINGTON, Minn., July 25 (UPI)—Lynne Betts led off the bottom of the 12th inning with a 403-foot homer to give the Minnesota Twins a 10-9 victory over Oakland yesterday and a sweep of a doubleheader.

Minnesota won the opener, 5-3, on Dan Ford's two-run homer, which erased a 3-2 Oakland lead in the seventh.

Tom Johnson, who relieved in the first game, went three innings to raise his record to 11-2.

At Baltimore, Elliot Maddox drove in the winning run with a sacrifice fly in the eighth inning after Eddie Murray's game-winning double won the opener, 3-2, as Baltimore swept a doubleheader from Milwaukee.

Mike Flanagan, 8-4, four-hit the Brewers to win his sixth straight complete-game victory in the opener as Murray doubled home Pat Kelly in the eighth inning after he singled and stole second.

At Seattle, Mario Guerrero's fielder's choice in the sixth inning drove in the winning run to give California a 4-3 victory and a sweep of their doubleheader with Seattle.

The Angels won the first game, 3-1, behind Bobby Bond's sacrifice fly and 21st homer.

At Cleveland, Claudell Washington raced home with the winning run on a fielder's choice in a two-run sixth inning and Doyle Alexander scattered seven hits to pace Texas to a 4-1 victory over Cleveland.

The Rangers, who have now won 12 of their last 15 games, put the lead runner on in five of the first six innings before scoring against starter and loser Wayne Garland.

At St. Louis, Eric Reineisen shut out Cincinnati on four hits to give St. Louis a 3-0 victory over the Reds.

Reineisen is now 7-10, with his victories coming in complete games. He struck out five and walked two.

Billy Martin Gains a Reprieve

By Dave Anderson

NEW YORK July 25 (UPI).—For 24 hours the whispers had been circulating that Billy Martin was about to be discharged and now, shortly before noon yesterday, the manager of the New York Yankees was sitting barefoot at the desk in his office deep in the Yankee Stadium catcombs.

"I feel like those guys on death row," Martin said, forcing a smile. "I need a reprieve from the governor."

Wearing a white sportshirt and pink slacks, the manager was smoking a cigar and sipping coffee from a plastic cup. "But if they were going to make a change today, I think I would have heard before this," Martin said. "You usually get a phone call in the morning so you don't come to the ballpark."

Call on Cue
And then the phone rang. Martin answered it, listened a moment, said, "I'll be up," and put down the receiver.

"That was Gabe," he said, meaning Gabe Paul, the Yankees' president. "I better keep my street clothes on."

He leaned down and put on his socks and shoes. But then he took another sip of coffee and lit a fresh cigar. "I'm not rushing up there," he said. "The first time you get fired, you think nothing can be that bad again. But each time it gets worse. It was bad when I got fired and each time I cry. I guess that shows how weak I am."

Official Request
At the door, a club official asked his permission to have some Yankee players sign autographs near the dugout. He agreed and when the man left, Martin's anguish showed in his thin face.

Martin mentioned how perhaps it had taken the Yankees' front office 24 hours to hire his successor, Dick Howser, the Yankee coach, reportedly had turned down the job, but he later denied having been offered it.

Another theory was that George Steinbrenner, who once hired Dick Williams, only to have Charles Finley of the Oakland A's cancel the deal in court, was hoping to persuade the Montreal Expos to liberate Williams now.

"That wouldn't surprise me," Martin said. "George wanted him
